“Accessibility is a Human Rights Issue”

1. Make sure disabled people can use the same services as everyone else.

2. Have services or supports in place that allow disabled people to live independently.
Getting Started

Understanding Disability & Accessibility

KSU is committed to creating an inclusive university for the benefit of all - especially those with disabilities. What does that mean for you? What do faculty and professional staff need to know?

Audiences & Needs

In a university setting, people may experience varying degrees of auditory, visual, cognitive, neurological, and physical impairments. These disabilities may be the result of birth, an illness, disease, accident, or an age-related impairment. Some individuals may not consider themselves "disabled" even if they experience limitations. However, it is important to understand these disabilities and some barriers faced by people who live with the impairments. Knowing the barriers helps us understand how to use technology to overcome them.

The following lists are not comprehensive. There are many other disabilities and barriers. This is simply a sampling to help
What is the difference between accommodation & accessibility?
“Accommodation shifts the burden to the person with disabilities. Accommodation requires a person with a disability to interact with a gatekeeper, to ask for something extra, and often to prove that she deserves accommodation in the first place.”

-Katie Pryal
Accessibility, alternatively, means that a space is always, 100% of the time, welcoming to people with disabilities.

Accessibility means that “accommodations” are integrated into a space and are not particularized to an individual—but rather created for our society as a whole.”

-Katie Pryal

Faculty Four of Accessible Development

Many of the requirements set forth in federal law are addressed through KSU’s website content management system, the academic learning management system, and other back end technology applications. However, there are some aspects of accessibility that will always be the faculty developer’s responsibility. In order to address these items, the Distance Learning Center would like for you to focus on the Faculty Four of Accessible Development.
